

Elliott H. Leitman, MD

Upon completing his undergraduate and medical degrees at Boston University, Dr. Leitman served as an orthopaedic resident at Einstein Medical Center in Philadelphia. During his residency, the Pennsylvania Orthopaedic Society cited him for excellence in research. From 1997 to 1998, Dr. Leitman completed a sports medicine and joint replacement fellowship with Booth, Bartlozzi, Balderston Orthopaedics in Philadelphia. As a sports medicine fellow, he was on the medical staff of Philadelphia's professional sports teams: Eagles, Flyers, Phantoms, and Kixx. In addition, he won the Philadelphia Orthopaedic Society for Sports Medicine award for academic excellence for his research of shoulder injuries. In 1998, Dr. Leitman joined Morgan Kalman Clinic after completing his sports medicine fellowship with Craig D. Morgan, M.D.

Currently, Dr. Leitman is the team doctor for several area high schools. He is on the board of directors and the sports medicine committee of Maccabi USA/Sports for Israel. Currently, Dr. Leitman cares for amateur and professional athletes. In addition he has published numerous peer reviewed articles, authored several orthopaedic text book chapters and has lectured extensively on issues pertaining to injuries to the knee and shoulders.

Dr. Leitman holds the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the United States Army Reserves and has received commendation for outstanding service while on duty. He is a certified private pilot and a member of the Aircraft Owners and Pilot Association.

In addition to sports medicine, Dr. Leitman has expertise in joint replacement, orthopaedic trauma, and general orthopaedics. He is board certified by the American Board of Orthopaedic Surgeons, a Fellow of the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, Arthroscopy Association of North America, Orthopaedic Trauma Association and the Society of Military Orthopaedic Surgeons.